Brownsville let the land go.

Brownsville took the land out of its city limits at SpaceX's request, and Starbase annexed it. Starbase will now consider a tax break for a gas-fired power plant and super-compute facility on the site, which its notice puts at about 444 acres.

About 444 acres, east of Brownsville

Between Boca Chica Blvd and the Port of Brownsville, now inside Starbase's limits, in Cameron County. The square holds the tract's area at true scale. The notice gives its area, not its shape.

About $24 billion, and up to $220 million

The notice estimates approximately $24 billion for the first phases. SpaceX agreed to give Brownsville up to $220 million for water and wastewater. The estimate is about 109 times that ceiling. One is an estimate and one a payment, so this is scale and not a price.

"Why are we rushing this?"

A Brownsville resident asked it at the Saturday meeting, the Tribune reported on August 31st. SpaceX's Sheila McCorkle told commissioners the offer would be off the table unless approved that day. They voted unanimously to de-annex.

Brownsville's pause stops at the line

Brownsville's 90-day moratorium on data center applications took effect the week before the Tribune's November 10th story. The Tribune says the project in Starbase circumvents it.

It could make its own power

The Tribune reports the gas-fired plant could power the facility without connecting to the state grid. It says the Governor had grid operators pause data center connection requests in August, pending audits. Drawn to illustrate.

28 days to be heard

Starbase's City Commission meets Wednesday, December 9th. It will consider a Chapter 312 tax abatement and a Chapter 380 agreement with SpaceX.

Brownsville stands by its vote

The city said it decided on the information and circumstances presented at the time. The South Texas Environmental Justice Network has announced a protest over air, water and energy bills. A Brownsville teacher told the Tribune many people need jobs and SpaceX has contributed to them.

Starbase hears the tax break December 9th

7 p.m., 48491 State Highway 4. The notice invites interested persons to attend and be heard on the proposed agreements.
