Cameras ride 50 brush trucks

The trucks already run routine Sanitation routes, the city’s October 19th briefing says. An April city memo planned two cameras per truck. The truck is drawn to illustrate.

50 trucks, 100 cameras planned

The December 2025 plan priced the system at $852,000 a year for 100 cameras, with a human in the loop for all actions. The yard is drawn to illustrate.

The camera flags. Staff decide, the city says.

City Detect flags possible conditions along the route for trained staff to review. The city says an observation is not a confirmed Code violation, and faces and license plates are blurred. Drawn to illustrate.

5,318 observations, each one reviewed

The city’s results table counts 5,318 observations reviewed. Staff review every one before Code Compliance acts, the briefing says. One tile here stands for one observation, drawn to illustrate.

What the city counted

Six rows of the October 19th results table at one scale, one length of limb per item. The table doesn’t say one row comes out of another.

A courtesy letter sets no deadline

The table counts 2,928 courtesy notices. A courtesy letter is now an educational reminder outside the citation process, the briefing says. The first letter used to be a formal notice of violation. Drawn to illustrate.

A person walks to the curb

In a prioritized inspection a Code Inspector checks on site whether a violation exists. The table counts 473 field inspections and 374 voluntary corrections. Drawn to illustrate.

Accuracy is still a next step

The October 19th briefing lists calibrating detection accuracy and setting accuracy measures as next steps. It publishes no accuracy figure, so the lowest arm holds no limb and its tag is blank.

ACCURACY, NO FIGURE IN THE BRIEFING

People make the decisions, the city says

The October 19th briefing to the Quality of Life, Arts, and Culture Committee says success is not measured by citations. The December 2025 plan proposed $852,000 a year on a contract the city could end with 10 days written notice. Drawn to illustrate.
