

The question is asked inside the chart

UTMB says the AI platform OpenEvidence puts cited medical evidence inside the UTMB electronic health record. It announced the collaboration on September 22nd. The cart and the lights are drawn to illustrate.

An answer with its sources

Clinicians sign in with their UTMB credentials and ask in plain language. Answers cite medical literature and guidelines, UTMB says. The tool went live in March.

Four hospital campuses

UTMB has hospitals on four campuses and more than 100 clinics across Southeast Texas. One cart is drawn for each campus, to illustrate.

ONE CART PER CAMPUS

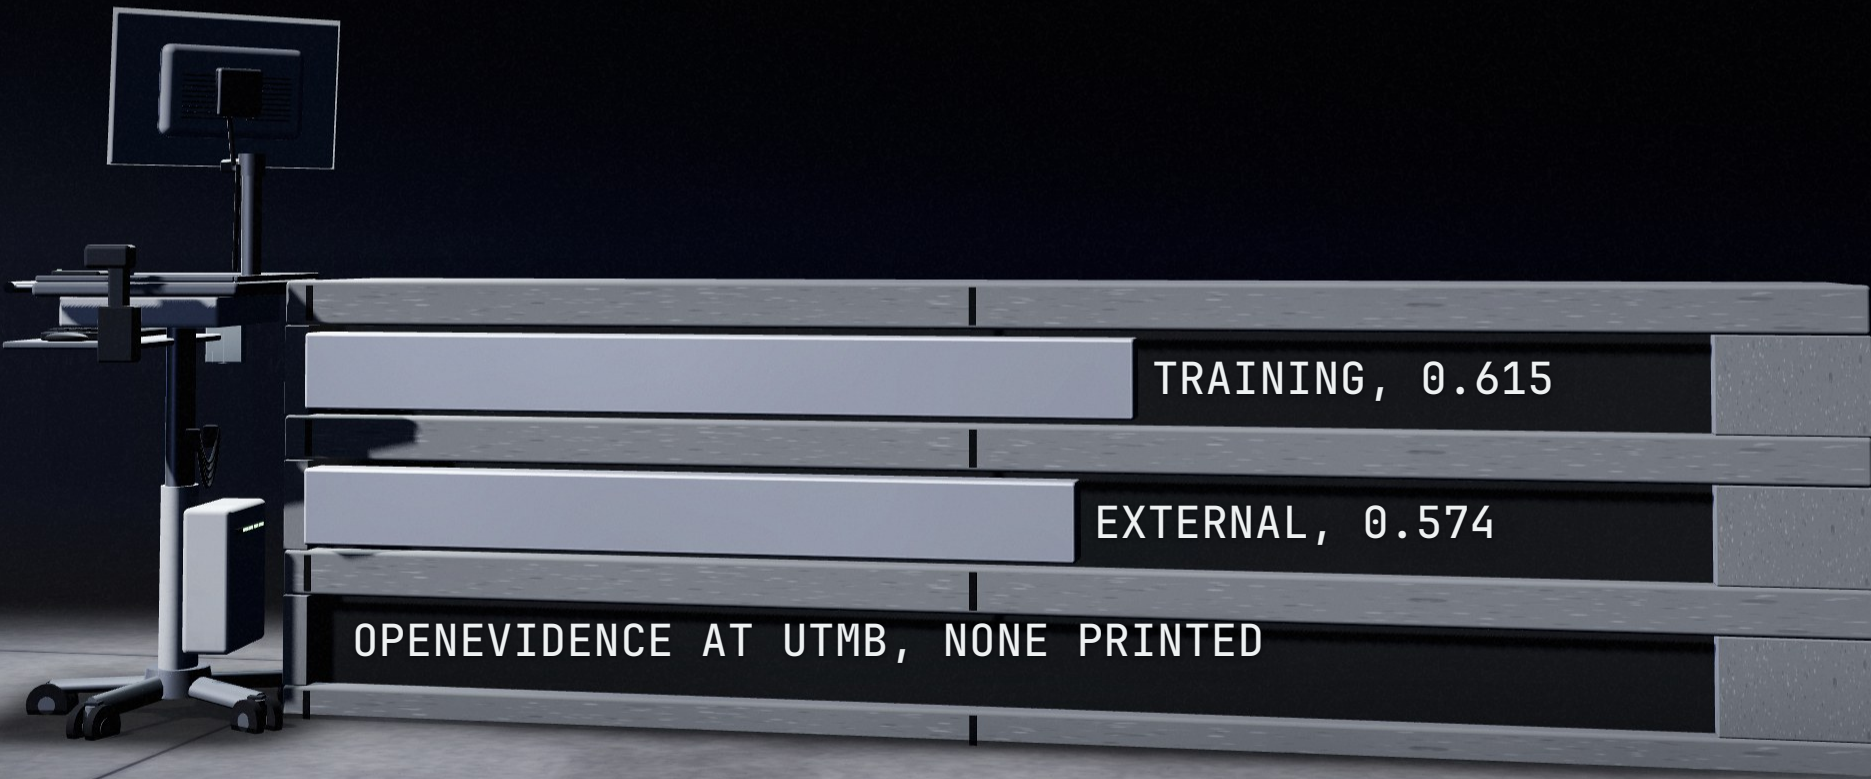

More than half of its clinicians use it

That is UTMB's own figure. The release prints no count of clinicians and no total. The fill stops at half and is left open past it.

Use is reported. No test is printed.

UTMB’s release prints no accuracy, error or outcome figure. UTMB says it will keep evaluating use. The bars are a different tool, an MRI model of survival in brain metastases with UTMB radiology authors, scored by C-index.

UTMB's other AI platform

UTMB's Qualified Health agreement began at $825,000. Item 65 on the Regents' August consent agenda would take it to $9,850,000 across all seven UT health institutions. It never names OpenEvidence, so the cart's screen is dark.

The law has a disclosure line

Since September 1st, 2025, Sec. 183.005 says a practitioner who uses AI for "diagnostic purposes" must disclose it to patients. UTMB calls its use "clinical decision support." The record here can't say whether the section reaches this use.

A patient can ask

Which tool was used? Did it shape the plan? Texas law has practitioners disclose AI used for diagnostic purposes.

Or ask the Regents

The Regents meet November 18th to 19th. The public may testify on any topic the agenda lists. Send the board's General Counsel a name and topic at least 24 hours ahead.
